ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This iteration of the Faculty Development International Seminar (FDIS) was more complex than the preceding five on a number of registers: distance, logistics, and range of topics. In Taipei, Nanjing, and Shanghai we would not have been successful without the exceptional contributions and hospitality of the following colleagues: in Taipei, Dr. Allen Chun, Dr. Horng-luen Wang of Academia Sinica, Dr. Yu-ling Christie Chang of National Chengchi University; in Nanjing, Dr. Cong Cong, Dr. Shuxia Tang, Dr. Shu Gao, Dr. Jing Kaixuan, and Mr. Zhuzhong Qian—all of Nanjing University; and in Shanghai, Dr. Chen Xihe of Shanghai University, Dr. John S. Parker of Fudan University and Jiaotong University, Mr. Yan Li, Ms. Wenjun Gu of Dragon Television, and, most of all, Mr. John Lu, whose graciousness, flexibility, and mastery of the ways of this old but emerging global city were a decisive boon for the Shanghai stage of the seminar. We express our gratitude to all.

On the United States side, we are thankful for the efficient travel facilitation to Terry M. Zats and his staff at Village Travel Service, the staff of the International Center, the Institute for Global Citizenship (particularly Margaret Beegle), and the Department of International Studies, and Professor Maurice Meisner, who traveled to Macalester College to deliver the lead essay. I would like to acknowledge the indispensable work of Michael Monahan, Director of our International Center, and the organizational leader of these seminars. Without Mike's energy, experience, patience, and commitment to high quality, these institutional endeavors would not be what they have become: distinctive and highly successful. Finally, I salute our student workers, Erin Gullikson, Cassie Veach, and Urvashi Wattal, for their invaluable contribution to the long process of editing the volume.
